HOMEMAKERS' ITEMS

How you handle and care for meat products during the holiday season —or any other time— can have a lot to do with the health and safety of your family.

Dr. E. O. Essary, poultry specialist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, says country housewives will be preparing turkey with dressing, ham, and other meats for the holidays. And there's danger herein, if not done properly.

For instance, you may decide to cook a large turkey or ham in two installments — starting it one day and finishing in the next. Dr. Essary says cooking should be continuous. Partial cooking may produce a dry bird or ham and a reheated flavor. If you want to partially cook the meat ahead of time be sure to observe certain precautions.

When a turkey with dressing, ham or roasts are partially cooked, the temperature at the center of the meat or dressing might rise to between 60 to 120 degrees and stay within this temperature range for several hours. This range is often referred to as the "incubation zone" for bacteria.

The Staphlococci organism which produces toxins that are responsible for outbreaks of common food poisoning or intestinal upsets thrive in this temperature. If the bacteria are present, toxins may be produced between the time the temperature of the partially cooked meat is between 50° and 120° until the temperature of the center of the meat is chilled back to below 50° F. Any bacteria present will, of course, be destroyed by the second cooking process, but if these toxins have been produced they will not be destroyed by cooking and may cause illness.

Homemakers' Note

When unexpected guests arrive, reach for a can, jar, or package of dried beef. With a can or two of milk, you can make well-seasoned creamed chipped beef, served on toast. Or with a package of macaroni or egg noodles, you can make a casserole within a half hour.

MRS. HALLIE T. MORRIS

As we go to press, we are informed of the death of Mrs. Hallie T. Morris, widow of the late R. W. Morris. She died early today at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Richard M. Webb. Funeral arrangements will be announced.

1962 AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION PROGRAM SIGN-UP UNDER WAY

Announcement was made by C. D. Lewis, director of the local ASC County committee, that all Appomattox County farmers who should visit the ASC office to get the facts on the 1962 Agricultural Conservation Program. The program offers farmers an opportunity to conserve their soil and water resources.

According to Mr. Lewis, the program provides for the federal government to share with farmers the cost of carrying out approved soil building and soil and water conservation practices.

The initial signup period is from December 1 and will continue through January 31, 1962. Farmers, in the county, who have not received a copy of the program and the sign-up instructions may contact Mr. Lewis or any of the members of the county committee. The Community is divided into districts and every farmer in the county will be able to participate in the program. Persons who cannot visit the county office before January 31 may still sign-up for the 1962 program at a later date.

MEMORIAL METHODIST CHURCH ACTIVITIES

Christmas Eve Holy Communion will be celebrated at the 6:30 o'clock Service Sunday, following the Meditation "A Child Is Born", based upon the Prophecy of Isaiah. The Male Chorus will present Special Christmas Carols, and the Congregation will join the Traditional Yuletide Hymns.

At the 11:00 o'clock Worship Service, for the Christmas-Eve Service, The Chapel Choir will present the following Christmas selections: "Never Shone A Light So Fair", duet by Jill and Jenny Henry. Anthem: "Jesus Is Born", with solo part by Faye Fuller, accompanied by the Youth Choir; and Mary Lou Martin will sing as a solo, "Glory To God". The Minister's Sermon will be: "The Star Still Shines", giving encouragement to those still living in the land of the shadows of earthly sin and sorrows.

The two final services of 1961 will feature Selections by the Mens Chorus for the Morning Worship and a Special Recognition Service honoring young people home for the holidays from college and places of employment outside the home community.

The two final services will mark the climax of a Year of Great Significance for the Memorial: a Year in which construction of a New Church Sanctuary and Church School Building were begun, and when many sacrifices were made for the glory of God and the furtherance of His Kingdom on the Earth. Let there be great rejoicing for the many accomplishments achieved by the Presence and Power of the Lord in the life of His people everywhere.
